

SAMĀDHI WATER REPENTANCE

SCROLL THREE PRACTICE GUIDE

Karmic results, dedication and memorial practice explained

Triple Gem • realms • Pure Land • memorial altar

Prepared by Daniel Franjkovic

daniel.franjkovic@outlook.com.au

More Buddhist terms: www.fgsitc.org/glossary/

Open the project

EXPANDED COMPANION EDITION

Scroll Three Practice Companion

Results, vows, dedication and memorial practice

Prepared by Daniel Franjkovic

daniel.franjkovic@outlook.com.au

Source edition

Fo Guang Shan Hsi Lai Temple, Electronic Edition 3.0, April 2022.
English translation, editing and design by Andrew Nguy and Raymond Kong.

This independent companion explains the source liturgy. It is not a replacement translation or an official temple edition. Source-page references count PDF pages; printed page numbers are given where useful. In communal practice, follow the officiant's instructions.

The original liturgies remain copyrighted by Fo Guang Shan Hsi Lai Temple and are linked in the references. New explanations and reading notes are clearly distinguished from source wording.

Further Buddhist terminology: www.fgsitc.org/glossary/

A4 print edition. Revised September 2026.

Contents

Page numbers and PDF bookmarks lead to the main sections and reading aids.

Scroll Three 4

- Before beginning 4
- The movement of Scroll Three 4
- Guide to Scroll Three 4
- 1. Lamp's Radiant Light Praise 4
- 2. Prayer of Entering Repentance 5
- 3. Repairing the Relationship with the Triple Gem 5
- 4. Remorse, Shame and Everyday Conduct 6
- 5. Resultative Obstructions and Impermanence 7
- 6. Avīci and the Hell Realms 8
- 7. Animals, Hungry Ghosts, Spirits and Asuras 8
- 8. Residual Results Among Humans and Devas 9
- 9. Universal Vows and Dedication 10
- 10. Final Mantra and Prayer of Exiting Repentance 10
- 11. Memorial Altar Dedication 11
- 12. Venerable Master Hsing Yun's Prayer 13
- 13. Final Verse of Dedication 13
- Scroll Three in one view 14

References 15

- Source liturgy 15
- Fo Guang Shan and Hsi Lai Temple resources 15
- Terminology and language sources 15
- Canonical and translation sources 15
- Later Pure Land teaching used with a clear label 16
- Historical and academic studies 16
- Figure relationships and recognition 16
- Artwork records 17
- Editorial limits 17

Scroll Three

What each part is doing and why

Scroll Three completes the Water Repentance. It examines damaged relationships with the Buddha, Dharma and Sangha, turns to the painful results of karma, dedicates the practice to all beings and closes with memorial and Pure Land rites.

This guide explains the English translation without reproducing the full liturgy. Page numbers refer to Fo Guang Shan Hsi Lai Temple's 2022 electronic edition.

Read the explanation for a section before following those pages in the source. During the rite, listen for the turn from feared result to compassionate transformation. The severe catalogues are not the last word: each is answered by refuge, a counter-vow or dedication. Follow the officiant for communal actions and pacing.

Before beginning

- Scroll Three assumes the work of Scrolls One and Two. Affliction has been recognised, harmful actions confessed and positive vows established.
- Its descriptions of hells and rebirth belong to traditional Buddhist moral cosmology and ritual imagery. Some Buddhists read the realms primarily as objective rebirth destinations, some also use them as descriptions of states of mind, and many allow both levels.
- The aim of the severe imagery is urgency followed by transformation. The vows repeatedly turn prisons into Pure Lands, weapons into jewels and suffering into conditions for awakening.
- The memorial altar extends the practice to deceased people and other beings through recitation, offerings and dedication of merit.
- The source often links a form of suffering with past karma. This is its traditional ritual worldview, not evidence for diagnosing the cause of a real person's illness, disability, poverty, bereavement or abuse.

The movement of Scroll Three

Movement	Why it follows
Lamp and entry prayer	The final session begins by bringing light to difficult consequences.
Triple Gem confession	The practitioner repairs their relationship with the sources of guidance.
Everyday conduct	Respect becomes concrete in livelihood, restraint and community life.
Resultative obstruction	The effects of action and the urgency of impermanence come into view.
Realms and residual results	Compassion is extended across every painful condition.
Universal and memorial dedication	The practice is released towards living and deceased beings.
Hsing Yun prayer and final verse	The completed rite returns to daily conduct and society.

Guide to Scroll Three

1. Lamp's Radiant Light Praise

Source page 3

What is happening?

The assembly bows and praises a lamp whose light reaches dark paths. The verse names King Yama and Dīpaṃkara Buddha.

Why is it done?

Light represents awareness and wisdom. At the beginning of the final scroll, the lamp announces that even the darkest karmic condition can be seen clearly and approached through practice.

Beginner notes

- King Yama is a traditional judge or administrator associated with the realms of the dead. He is not a creator god or an eternal ruler of damnation.
- Dīpaṃkara, whose name is associated with lamp light, is a Buddha of the distant past. Traditional accounts say that he predicted a future Buddhahood for the person who would become Śākyamuni.
- Lamps offered at an altar commonly symbolise the wish that wisdom dispel ignorance.

What to attend to

The lamp does not deny darkness; it makes response possible. At the opening of this scroll, notice whether fear causes avoidance, fascination or care. The praise directs attention towards seeing clearly enough to act compassionately.

2. Prayer of Entering Repentance

Source pages 4-7

What is happening?

The third session is opened through refuge, prostration and the transformation of body, speech and mind. Buddhas, bodhisattvas, sages and protective beings are invited to witness the practice.

Why does the prayer repeat the number three?

The language links the third scroll with several Buddhist triads: the three karmas of body, speech and mind; the three vehicles; the three realms; the three bodies of a Buddha; and the threefold repetition of refuge and request.

Beginner notes

- The three vehicles are paths associated with disciples, solitary buddhas and bodhisattvas. Mahāyāna texts often gather them within the ultimate aim of Buddhahood.
- The three bodies describe Buddhahood as truth or reality, transcendent enjoyment and compassionate manifestation.
- The three realms are the desire, form and formless realms within saṃsāra.
- The four immeasurables are loving-kindness, compassion, appreciative joy and equanimity.

Reading note: the English “our third practice, our third cleansing” on page 4 renders the Chinese idiom 三熏三沐, literally three perfumings and three bathings. It expresses repeated preparation as a mark of reverence, rather than naming a technical meditation called “the third practice”. The third scroll is named separately later in the prayer. This distinction follows the Chinese source and the Taiwan Ministry of Education dictionary's explanation of the idiom.

What to attend to

The repeated triads make the whole person answerable. Body, speech and mind are gathered; different paths and realms are included; different dimensions of Buddhahood are invoked. The practical question is whether the ritual words, physical conduct and underlying intention agree.

3. Repairing the Relationship with the Triple Gem

Source pages 8-13

What is happening?

The assembly confesses disrespect towards Buddha images, stupas and temples; careless handling or distortion of scriptures; contempt for monastics and teachers; misuse of religious identity; and neglect of sacred places.

Why does material care matter?

Buddhist statues, books and buildings are not creator gods. They are supports for memory, teaching and community. Caring for them trains gratitude and preserves access to the Dharma for others.

The three relationships

Refuge	What can be damaged	Positive repair
Buddha	Disrespect, destruction or reducing awakening to an object of status	Reverence for awakening and care for its images
Dharma	Distorting, neglecting, withholding or using teachings for fame	Accurate study, preservation and sincere practice
Sangha	Contempt, exploitation, false representation or disruption	Respect, ethical support and harmonious community

Six points of reverent harmony

The vows refer to a community living harmoniously through shared bodily conduct, speech, intention, ethical discipline, understanding and use of resources. The precise wording varies across Buddhist sources, but the purpose is stable: practise together without rivalry and misuse.

Ordinary ways the relationship is repaired

Relationship	A present-day example of care
Buddha	Handle an image respectfully and remember that its purpose is awakening, not decoration or status.
Dharma	Quote a teaching accurately, include its context and correct an error once discovered.
Sangha	Avoid gossip that divides a community, use donated resources for their stated purpose and raise genuine concerns through responsible channels.

Respect does not require concealing misconduct by a teacher or institution. Protecting people, keeping accurate records and seeking proper accountability can be ways of honouring the Dharma and Sangha.

Why this matters Refuge is a lived relationship. Respect for the Triple Gem is shown through how teachings are handled, how communities are treated and whether practice is used honestly.

4. Remorse, Shame and Everyday Conduct

Source pages 14-19

What is happening?

The text identifies remorse and shame as two protective qualities, then confesses arrogance, intoxication, overconsumption, improper livelihood, misuse of offerings, jealousy and neglect of practice.

What do remorse and shame mean here?

- Remorse recognises that one's own harmful action should not be repeated.
- Moral shame recognises the dignity of oneself and others and refuses to encourage wrongdoing.

They are not permanent self-condemnation. They are the capacity to feel an ethical boundary and change direction.

The source says that a person without remorse and shame is no different from birds and beasts. This is forceful premodern rhetoric about moral heedlessness. It should not be used to dehumanise a person or demean animals. Its workable point is that recognising a boundary helps prevent further harm.

A related Mahāyāna source pairs sincere confession with the resolve not to repeat the act and uses cleansing-water imagery for shame and restraint. See BDK America's The Mahayana Sutra of Previous Lives and Contemplation of the Mind-ground, pp. 72-74 of the translated text.

Five pungent vegetables

Some East Asian monastic traditions avoid garlic, onions and related pungent plants, especially in periods of formal practice. Traditional explanations link their smell or stimulating effect with ritual purity and mental agitation. This discipline is distinct from the general lay precepts.

In the immediate source context, the concern includes strong odour around scriptures, images and the assembled community. Do not turn this passage into a universal medical claim or assume that every Buddhist follows the same dietary rule.

Improper livelihood

The passage applies ethics to earning and receiving resources. It includes dealing in animals for slaughter, intoxicants, exploitation through debt and accepting religious support without living up to the responsibilities attached to it.

The positive vow

The assembly vows to be kind, loyal, filial, humble, patient and careful with the senses and three karmas. Repentance is again completed by describing the conduct that should replace the fault.

What to attend to Translate an inherited virtue into safe, ethical conduct. Filial care can mean gratitude and practical support, but it does not require submitting to abuse. Loyalty does not mean hiding wrongdoing. Humility does not mean erasing one's needs. The vows are directed towards reduced harm and greater wisdom.

5. Resultative Obstructions and Impermanence

Source pages 20-23

What is happening?

After afflictive and karmic obstructions, the liturgy turns to resultative obstructions, the painful conditions in which the effects of karma mature.

Why does it speak so urgently about death?

The passage stresses that youth, wealth, status and even refined meditation do not make conditioned life permanent. The next breath is not guaranteed. Practice should begin while choice and support are available.

The story of a deva

The text recalls a celestial being whose signs of approaching death are reversed through repentance. The story supports the ritual claim that sincere reform and wholesome conditions can alter the direction of a life.

Subhadra and Udrakarāmaputra

The example of a highly accomplished meditator later falling into an animal birth warns that concentration alone is not final liberation. Temporary mastery of a subtle state is not the same as ending ignorance and rebirth.

The passage reports this as a teaching given to Subhadra about his teacher Udrakarāmaputra. It is a traditional example inside the liturgy, not a historically verified biography supplied by this guide.

> In simple terms Do not confuse a comfortable condition, high status or unusual meditation experience with complete freedom.

Urgency without panic

The death reflection is meant to loosen postponement. It does not require predicting death, abandoning treatment or making reckless decisions. A grounded response is to complete a repair, clarify a will or responsibility, renew practice and give attention to someone while the opportunity exists.

6. Avīci and the Hell Realms

Source pages 24-29

What is happening?

The text gives an elaborate description of Avīci and names many other hot, cold and specialised hells. The images include iron walls, fire, weapons, predatory beings and repeated injury.

What is Avīci?

Avīci means "without interval". It is traditionally described as a hell of uninterrupted suffering produced by extremely destructive karma. It is not eternal in the sense of an unending divine sentence, but its duration is depicted as immense.

How can the imagery be understood?

Recognised Buddhist readings include:

- Cosmological: hells are possible rebirth destinations within saṃsāra.
- Psychological: hatred, terror and compulsive violence can create hell-like experience in the present.
- Ritual and ethical: the extreme images break complacency and turn the mind away from cruelty.

These readings can overlap. The liturgy itself treats the realms as karmic realities while also using them as moral images.

The great walls, distances and durations signal overwhelming scale. Units such as the yojana are ancient and vary by source, so converting the numbers into a precise modern map would create false accuracy.

Some readers may find the graphic descriptions distressing. It is reasonable to pause, ground attention and return with support. The practice purpose is not to rehearse violence for its own sake, but to recognise the gravity of cruelty and strengthen the wish that suffering end.

The decisive movement

The confession does not delight in punishment. Its vow is that Avīci become a Pure Land, instruments of torture become sources of peace and every suffering being encounter liberation.

What to attend to

Keep listening until the transformation vow. A reading that stops at punishment misses the section's direction. The assembly imagines walls removed, weapons changed, wardens compassionate and beings able to hear the Dharma. Fear is converted into a programme of liberation.

7. Animals, Hungry Ghosts, Spirits and Asuras

Source pages 30-36

What is happening?

After another Buddha-name litany, the text considers painful results associated with non-human realms.

Realm or being	Central condition in the passage	Practice response
Animals	Ignorance, fear, confinement, labour and being harmed by others	Wisdom, freedom and protection of life
Hungry ghosts	Insatiable hunger and thirst	Generosity, contentment and the liberating "sweet dew" of Dharma
Troubled spirits	Distortion, insecurity and harmful livelihood	Honesty, beauty of character and benefit to others
Asuras	Conflict, jealousy and aggressive competition	Equanimity, non-deception and peace

The source also associates ghosts, spirits and asuras with “hideousness” and deception. This is inherited karmic and aesthetic language. It must not be reversed into the claim that a person's appearance reveals character or past wrongdoing.

Contentment

The section begins by contrasting desire with contentment. A person may possess little and still experience ease, or live in luxury and remain dissatisfied. Contentment does not mean refusing improvement. It means freedom from the belief that one more possession will finally make grasping secure.

Returning by vow

The assembly vows not to fall helplessly into the lower realms, while allowing for compassionate return by a bodhisattva who deliberately enters difficult conditions to help beings.

What to attend to

Each realm highlights a pattern that can be recognised without claiming that the realm is only psychological: fear and domination, unsatisfied craving, deception, or competitive anger. Pair recognition with the source's counter-practice. For example, notice one form of compulsive consumption and practise enoughness, or notice a rivalry and refuse the next deceptive move.

8. Residual Results Among Humans and Devas

Source pages 37-40

What is happening?

The confession lists illness, conflict, separation, poverty, disaster, fear, failed relationships and many other forms of vulnerability in human and heavenly lives.

What does "residual result" mean?

It is a remaining effect or tendency after a stronger karmic result has matured. The concept explains why difficulty can continue even within a comparatively fortunate rebirth.

Why include heavenly lives?

Deva existence is pleasurable but impermanent. When its supporting karma is exhausted, decline and rebirth continue. This is why the Buddhist goal is liberation, not simply heaven.

How to read the catalogue

The list is a communal confession within a traditional karmic worldview. Its practice purpose is compassion and urgency, not the confident diagnosis of any particular person's misfortune.

This caution is especially important because the source places disability, chronic illness, poverty, separation, disaster and hostile relationships inside its catalogue of “residual retributions”. The passage tells practitioners to repent and cultivate compassionate conditions. It does not authorise them to tell a disabled, ill or bereaved person that they caused their situation in a past life.

Source pattern, pages 37-40	Responsible reading
Illness or shortened life listed as karmic result	Receive this as the liturgy's general moral cosmology; use medical care and do not infer personal guilt.
Disability or an incomplete sense faculty listed as result	Do not treat disability as moral evidence or a person as spiritually deficient. Remove barriers and respond with respect.
Poverty, failed plans or separation listed as result	Material, social and interpersonal causes still matter. Offer practical help rather than a karmic verdict.
Conflict within families or relationships	Accountability belongs with harmful conduct. A victim is not responsible for another person's abuse.

What to attend to

Let the list widen compassion rather than narrow it into suspicion. Where the source names hunger, danger, exclusion or illness, ask what support can be offered now. The doctrine of karma does not cancel medicine, social responsibility, protection or grief.

9. Universal Vows and Dedication

Source pages 41-43

What is happening?

The merits of repenting the three obstructions are dedicated to all beings. The assembly wishes for present safety, sufficient food and clothing, faith in the Triple Gem, rebirth in Amitābha's Pure Land and progress towards Buddhahood.

Pure Land and liberation

Sukhāvatī is sought as an exceptionally supportive field for hearing the Dharma and advancing without ordinary obstacles. It is not merely a reward of celestial pleasure. Its purpose is the completion of the path for the benefit of beings.

The sequence matters. After surveying painful realms, the text does not settle for a more pleasant temporary rebirth. It seeks a Buddha-field where practice can continue without ordinary regression, then extends that aspiration to all beings.

Endless dedication

The formula that dedication will continue until space, beings, karma and affliction end echoes Samantabhadra's vast vows. Because these fields are treated as immeasurable, the commitment is effectively without limit.

What to attend to

Dedication changes possession into participation. Rather than treating merit as a private spiritual balance, the assembly wishes that whatever is wholesome becomes a condition for safety, understanding and awakening throughout the Dharma realm.

10. Final Mantra and Prayer of Exiting Repentance

Source pages 43-46

What is happening?

The Seven Buddhas mantra seals the main repentance. The assembly then reviews the whole service: circumambulation, sūtra and mantra recitation, confession, prostration, Buddha-name chanting and offerings.

Why review the actions?

The review gathers a long multi-session ritual into one field of merit. It also acknowledges that outward completion is not enough if the confession was insincere, so the assembly asks to repent once more.

This final review is an integrity check, not an invitation to endless self-doubt. Ask whether attention, words and conduct were reasonably aligned. If not, recognise the gap, renew the intention and continue without pretending that repetition itself guarantees change.

Why “ripa ripate” is not English

The English heading names the chant, but the line beneath it is a transliteration, meaning sacred sounds written in the Latin alphabet. The sounds began in an Indic language, were represented phonetically with Chinese characters, and were then transmitted through centuries of Chinese Buddhist chanting. The Chinese characters in this part often represent sound rather than an ordinary Chinese sentence.

Some Sanskrit elements remain recognisable, while other syllables cannot be translated securely. In group practice, the officiant and the pinyin line in the temple text are the pronunciation authority.

Chant guide: Seven Buddhas Offence-Extinguishing Mantra

Where: source PDF page 43, printed page 41.

Source form: ripa ripate kuha kuhate tranite nigalate
vimarite mahāgate jāmlamcamte svāhā
Easy cue: REE-pah REE-pah-tay, KOO-hah KOO-hah-tay, TRAH-nee-tay, NEE-gah-lah-tay; VEE-mah-ree-tay, mah-HAA-gah-tay, JAHM-lahm-CHAHM-tay, SWAA-hah.

What it means: There is no responsible word-for-word translation of the whole formula. Mahā means "great", gate is related to going or having gone, and svāhā is a traditional ending that seals or completes a mantra. Its Chinese title gives the reliable overall meaning: a mantra of the Seven Buddhas for extinguishing offences.

Why it is chanted: It gathers attention, expresses the intention that harmful karma and its obstructions be purified, and seals the three-scroll confession before the final exit prayer.

Important references

- Infinite Life Tathāgata is Amitāyus, the long-life aspect or name of Amitābha.
- The Lotus Treasury is a vast purified cosmos associated with Mahāyāna vision.
- The Dragon Flower assemblies are future teaching assemblies under Maitreya Buddha.
- The four kindnesses commonly include parents, sentient beings, rulers or society, and the Triple Gem. Lists vary by source.

11. Memorial Altar Dedication

Source pages 47-51

What is happening?

The service turns explicitly towards deceased beings. It invokes Amitābha, recites the Heart Sūtra and several dhāraṇīs, transforms food and water symbolically into boundless offerings, dedicates merit and respectfully sends off the sacred assembly.

Why Amitābha?

Amitābha is invoked as the guide and receiver of the Western Pure Land. In East Asian memorial practice, his name expresses the wish that deceased beings encounter clarity, support and a favourable rebirth in Sukhāvatī.

Why the Heart Sūtra?

The Heart Sūtra teaches that the five aggregates and all phenomena are empty of independent, permanent essence. In a memorial setting, this wisdom loosens fearful attachment to fixed identity while compassion continues to care for the deceased.

The pairing is deliberate: Amitābha gives the memorial aspiration a compassionate destination, while the Heart Sūtra prevents the mourner from turning any person or state into a fixed possession. Neither element asks for certainty about where a particular deceased person has gone.

The four dhāraṇī functions

Recitation	Ritual purpose
Rebirth in the Pure Land Dhāraṇī	Supports aspiration towards Amitābha's Pure Land.
Transformation of Food Dhāraṇī	Imagines a limited offering becoming sufficient for innumerable beings.
Sweet Dew Dhāraṇī	Offers cooling nourishment and Dharma relief to thirsty beings.
Universal Offering Dhāraṇī	Extends the offering throughout the whole Dharma realm.

Dhāraṇī syllables should be learned from the temple's liturgical text and sound model rather than reconstructed from English spelling. The cues below are calm first readings of the source's Latin-letter lines, not replacements for the officiant.

Chant guide: Heart Sūtra mantra

Where: source PDF page 49, printed page 47.

Source form: gate gate pāragate pārasaṃgate bodhi svāhā
Easy cue: GAH-tay GAH-tay PAA-rah-gah-tay PAA-rah-sung-gah-tay BOH-dhee SWAA-hah.

Plain meaning and purpose: A common interpretive rendering is “gone, gone, gone beyond, gone completely beyond, awakening, svāhā”. It condenses the Heart Sūtra's movement beyond fear, clinging and fixed concepts.

Chant guide: Rebirth in the Pure Land Dhāraṇī

Where: source PDF page 49, printed page 47.

Source form: Namo'mitābhāya tathāgatāya tadyathā; [oṃ] amṛtod bhave amṛta-siddhaṃ bhave; amṛta-vikrānte amṛta-vikrānta; gāmini gagana kīrta kāre svāhā
Easy cue: NAH-moh ah-mee-TAA-bhaa-yah tah-THAA-gah-taa-yah tud-yuh-THAA; ohm uh-MRIH-tohd BHAH-vay, uh-MRIH-tah SID-dhum BHAH-vay; uh-MRIH-tah vee-KRAAN-tay, uh-MRIH-tah vee-KRAAN-tah; GAA-mee-nee GAH-gah-nah KEER-tah KAA-ray SWAA-hah.

Plain meaning: The opening is clear: “Homage to Amitābha Tathāgata; thus”. Amṛta means “deathless” and also “nectar”, while siddhaṃ concerns accomplishment. Later words suggest powerful advance, going and space, but the transmitted grammar is not secure enough for a confident full translation.

Why it is chanted: It expresses purification, recollection of Amitābha and aspiration that deceased and living beings reach Sukhāvatī, where practice can continue towards awakening without ordinary regression.

Chant guide: Transformation of Food Dhāraṇī

Where: source PDF pages 49-50, printed pages 47-48.

Source form: Namaḥ sarva-tathāgatāvalokite; oṃ sambhara sambhara hūṃ
Easy cue: NAH-mah SAR-vah tah-THAA-gah-TAA-vah-loh-kee-tay; ohm SUM-bha-rah SUM-bha-rah hoom.

Plain meaning and purpose: “Homage to all the Tathāgatas who behold”, followed by a formula calling the offering to be gathered, supplied or made abundant. It imaginatively transforms a limited portion into an offering sufficient for innumerable beings.

Chant guide: Sweet Dew Dhāraṇī

Where: source PDF page 50, printed page 48.

Source form: Namaḥ surūpāya tathāgatāya tadyathā; oṃ suru suru pra suru pra suru svāhā
Easy cue: NAH-mah soo-ROO-paa-yah tah-THAA-gah-taa-yah tud-yuh-THAA; ohm SOO-roo SOO-roo prah SOO-roo prah SOO-roo SWAA-hah.

Plain meaning and purpose: The opening honours the Beautiful-Form Tathāgata. The repeated suru sounds do not have a secure separate English meaning here. The chant expresses the wish that the offering become cooling “deathless nectar”, bringing nourishment, Dharma relief and liberation.

Chant guide: Universal Offering Dhāraṇī

Where: source PDF page 50, printed page 48.

Source form: Oṃ gagana sambhava vajra hoḥ
Easy cue: ohm GAH-gah-nah SUM-bha-vah VAJ-rah hoh.

Plain meaning and purpose: The recoverable words suggest “born or arisen from space” and vajra, the diamond or thunderbolt symbol of indestructible awakened power. The chant extends the offering throughout the whole Dharma realm.

When you hear “Nam Mô A Di Đà Phật”

This Vietnamese Buddha-name recitation means “Homage to Amitābha Buddha” or “I take refuge in Amitābha Buddha”. A rough Southern Vietnamese cue is nahm moh ah yee dah fuht. The last word, Phật, ends with a short, unreleased “t”. Follow the temple's tones and rhythm when chanting with the community.

Reciting the name recollects Amitābha and voices the wish to be reborn after this life in Sukhāvatī, his Western Pure Land or Buddha-field. The dedication on source page 50 says that the nine grades of lotus blossoms serve as parents: this is transformational or lotus birth rather than ordinary birth from a womb.

> The lotus with your name: Some later Pure Land teaching materials say that sincere faith, vows, name-recitation and practice nourish a lotus in Sukhāvatī associated with the practitioner, sometimes pictured as bearing the practitioner's name. This is a devotional visualisation, not a sentence found in the Water Repentance or the shorter Amitābha Sūtra. Its practical message is that each recitation strengthens one's direction towards the Pure Land, and the opening lotus represents awakening and seeing Amitābha.

Sending off the sacred

The rite concludes by thanking and respectfully releasing the invoked assembly. This gives a clear boundary to the ritual encounter.

What to attend to

If a particular deceased person is in mind, dedicate without trying to force a sign or emotional experience. The rite supplies words, offerings and a direction of care. Grief may remain, and that is compatible with sincere practice.

12. Venerable Master Hsing Yun's Prayer

Source pages 52-58

What is happening?

A modern prayer restates the Water Repentance in direct language. It confesses greed, pride, hatred, wrong views and carelessness, then uses memorable images of dams, ploughs, light and cleansing water.

Why is it important?

The prayer connects the medieval liturgy with Fo Guang Shan's Humanistic Buddhist emphasis on daily life. Repentance is applied to relationships, society, confidence, compassion and practical service.

Images to remember

- Dams of repentance stop the flood of desire.
- Ploughs of repentance level mountains of pride.
- Clear pearls purify confused or defiled awareness.
- Dharma water cleanses knots of karmic enmity.

The final pathway

The prayer asks practitioners to use kindness and compassion to beautify life, joy and equanimity to improve society, precepts and meditation to regulate conduct, and wisdom to purify the mind. It is a concise programme for carrying the ritual into ordinary action.

The prayer carries the practice into social responsibility through kindness, compassion, joy, equanimity and the cleansing of enmity. As practical applications of the wider three-scroll ethic, this companion suggests caring for vulnerable people, refusing exploitation, using resources responsibly and contributing to peace. These examples are reading aids, not a quoted list from the prayer.

13. Final Verse of Dedication

Source page 58

What is happening?

The complete three-scroll practice ends by dedicating its benefit throughout all Dharma realms. Chan, Pure Land, ethical discipline and patient equality appear together.

What does this reveal about the tradition?

The liturgy is not limited to one narrow method. It brings together meditation, Buddha-name recollection, precepts, repentance, mantra, wisdom and universal vows within a Chinese Mahāyāna and Fo Guang Shan setting.

Scroll Three in one view

Movement	Purpose
Lamp and entry	Bring wisdom into the final session.
Triple Gem confession	Repair relationships with awakening, teaching and community.
Resultative obstruction	Face impermanence and the consequences of karma.
Realms of suffering	Turn fear and cruelty towards compassionate liberation.
Universal dedication	Share every benefit with all beings.
Memorial altar	Support the deceased through wisdom, offering and Pure Land aspiration.
Hsing Yun prayer	Carry repentance into daily life and society.

Scroll Three's final message is transformation. Nothing harmful is denied, but no being is reduced forever to a harmful action or painful realm. Confession becomes vow, fear becomes urgency, offering becomes boundless and the merit of practice is released for the welfare and awakening of all.

After the final dedication, identify one result you can help change in the present: a damaged relationship that can be repaired safely, a material need you can support, a community resource you can protect, or a pattern of cruelty you can stop feeding. This gives the scroll's vast vows a concrete next condition.

References

Sources and editorial limits

The original reference set was checked on 24 August 2026. Sources added for the expanded figure profiles and reading aids were checked on 27 September 2026. This does not claim that every earlier external link was rechecked on the later date. The guide paraphrases its copyrighted source and uses short labels only where necessary for explanation.

Source liturgy

- Fo Guang Shan Hsi Lai Temple. Liturgy of the Samādhi Water Repentance of Kindness and Compassion: Scroll One. Electronic edition 3.0, 2022. Main source for the Scroll One guide and page map.
- Fo Guang Shan Hsi Lai Temple. Scroll Two. Electronic edition 3.0, 2022. Main source for the Scroll Two guide and page map.
- Fo Guang Shan Hsi Lai Temple. Scroll Three. Electronic edition 3.0, 2022. Main source for the Scroll Three guide, memorial rites and final prayer.

The PDFs credit Andrew Nguy and Raymond Kong as translators, editors and graphic designers. They state that reproduction requires the publisher's permission except for fair use. The original PDFs are therefore not included in this repository.

Fo Guang Shan and Hsi Lai Temple resources

- Fo Guang Shan International Translation Center. Buddhist Glossary. Primary terminology cross-check.
- Fo Guang Shan International Translation Center. The Heart Sūtra. Five aggregates, emptiness and Avalokiteśvara.
- Fo Guang Shan International Translation Center. The Amitabha Sutra. Amitābha, Sukhāvatī and Pure Land practice.
- Fo Guang Shan International Translation Center. The Forty-Eight Vows of Amitabha Buddha. Dharmākara's vows and Pure Land aspiration.
- Fo Guang Shan International Translation Center. Starting a Daily Practice. Amitābha name-recitation, Pure Land aspiration and the image of rebirth on a lotus.
- Fo Guang Shan International Translation Center. Master's Advice on Daily Practice. Refuge, prostration, offerings, chanting and dedication.
- Fo Guang Shan International Translation Center. Visiting a Buddhist Temple. Temple etiquette and ritual actions.
- Fo Guang Shan International Translation Center. The Buddhist Perspective on Life and Destiny. Karma, repentance and the image of Dharma water.
- Fo Guang Shan. Samantabhadra Bodhisattva Shrine. White elephant, six tusks, vows and practice.
- Fo Guang Shan. Objectives of Fo Guang Shan. Humanistic Buddhist institutional context.

Terminology and language sources

- Taiwan Ministry of Education. Revised Mandarin Chinese Dictionary, 三熏三沐. Defines the idiom behind the source's “our third practice, our third cleansing” as repeated perfuming and bathing expressing reverent preparation. Checked 27 September 2026.

Canonical and translation sources

- BDK America. The Mahayana Sutra of Previous Lives and Contemplation of the Mind-ground. Confession, shame, vows and repentance at phenomenal and principle levels.
- BDK America. A Forest of Pearls from the Dharma Garden, volume 1. Traditional cosmology and six-realm context.
- BDK America. The Lotus Sutra, revised second edition. Prabhūtaratna and the jewelled stūpa in Chapter 11; Avalokiteśvara's responsive forms in Chapter 25.

- BDK America. The Scripture of Master of Medicine, Beryl Radiance Tathāgata. Medicine Master Buddha's twelve vows and devotional role.
- BDK America. The Sutra That Expounds the Descent of Maitreya Buddha and His Enlightenment. Maitreya as the future Buddha who appears after the decline of Śākyamuni's teaching.
- BDK America. Sūtra on the Past Vows of Kṣitigarbha Bodhisattva. Kṣitigarbha's vow narratives, filial setting and universal compassion. The translator's introduction also distinguishes the popular summary vow from the scripture's exact wording.
- 84000: Translating the Words of the Buddha. The Dhāraṇī "Essence of Immeasurable Longevity and Wisdom". A canonical example linking recitation of Amitābha's name with Sukhāvatī and lotus birth rather than gestation in a womb.
- SuttaCentral. Aṅguttara Nikāya 6.63, Penetrative. Early Buddhist definition of karma through intention.
- SuttaCentral. Saṃyutta Nikāya 12.2, Analysis of Dependent Origination. The twelve links.
- SuttaCentral. Sanskrit fragment of the Mahāvadāna, "The Characteristics of the Seven Buddhas". The succession of Vipaśyin, Śikhin, Viśvabhū, Krakucchanda, Kanakamuni, Kāśyapa and Śākyamuni.

Later Pure Land teaching used with a clear label

- Amitabha Buddhist Society. Pure Mind, Compassionate Heart: Lessons from the Amitabha Sutra, p. 91. Source for the later devotional image of a lotus associated with the practitioner and described as bearing the practitioner's name. The companion does not present this detail as wording from the Water Repentance or the shorter Amitābha Sūtra.

Historical and academic studies

- De Hong. A Study and Translation of The Compassionate Water Repentance Ritual. University of the West, 2011. Main historical study used for the development of the ritual, uncertain authorship, traditional Wuda narrative, and phenomenal and principle repentance.
- Wendi L. Adamek. "Addressing the Mind: Developments in the Culture of Confession in Sui-Tang China". Journal of Chinese Buddhist Studies 28, 2015, pp. 117-152. Chinese Buddhist confession and repentance context.
- Sun He-Rong. "A Study on the Purification of Defilements in The Compassion-Samadhi-Water-Repentance". Nanhua University, 2024. Modern study of the first scroll's defilement lists and practice.
- Stanford Encyclopedia of Philosophy. Japanese Pure Land Philosophy. Used cautiously for the broader doctrinal distinction between Pure Land aspiration and ordinary saṃsāric heaven. The companion does not treat the Chinese liturgy as a Japanese sectarian text.

Figure relationships and recognition

These museum and institutional records support the profile's visual cues and relationship notes. They do not imply that every regional image uses the same attributes.

- National Museum of Asian Art. The Buddha Shakyamuni with the Bodhisattvas Samantabhadra and Manjushri. Śākyamuni's East Asian grouping with wisdom and practice.
- The Metropolitan Museum of Art. Amitabha triad and stele with Avalokiteśvara and Mahāsthāmaprāpta. The Western Pure Land triad and crown emblems.
- The Metropolitan Museum of Art. Buddha Vairocana. The wisdom-fist gesture in one East Asian esoteric form.
- The Metropolitan Museum of Art. Buddha of Medicine mural. Medicine Master with Sunlight and Moonlight bodhisattvas and twelve guardians.
- The Metropolitan Museum of Art. Mañjuśrī and Kṣitigarbha. The wisdom sword and text; the monastic robe, staff and jewel.
- The Metropolitan Museum of Art. Gandharan Maitreya and Budai. Maitreya in Tuṣita and the later East Asian identification of the laughing monk Budai with Maitreya.

- Norton Simon Museum. Dīpamkara Buddha; and The Metropolitan Museum of Art, Dīpamkara and Sumedha. Museum summaries of the traditional prediction story and variations in the bodhisattva's name.

Artwork records

Each image caption in FIGURES.md gives its direct museum or Wikimedia source and licence. Key collection records include:

- The Metropolitan Museum of Art: Avalokiteśvara, Samantabhadra, Mahāsthāmaprāpta and Kṣitigarbha.
- Wikimedia Commons: Śākyamuni, Vairocana, Amitābha, Dīpamkara, Maitreya, Medicine Master Buddha, Prabhūtaratna and Śākyamuni and the Seven Buddhas.

Editorial limits

- Sanskrit names and terms are normalised only where the identification is secure. The source spelling remains the reference for chanting.
- English pronunciation cues are approximations, not International Phonetic Alphabet transcriptions. In communal chanting, the officiant and the source's pinyin rhythm take priority.
- Mantra words are translated only where the Sanskrit sense is reasonably secure. Transmitted syllables with uncertain grammar are explained by ritual function rather than assigned an invented literal meaning.
- Lotus birth is distinguished from the later devotional image of a name-bearing lotus. The former is widely attested in Pure Land sources; the latter is presented as a teaching image, not as a sentence from the source liturgy.
- Vietnamese names are a recognition aid only. Tone and regional pronunciation should be learned from a Vietnamese speaker or temple.
- Literal and psychological interpretations of cosmological realms are both identified as recognised approaches. The guide does not claim that all Buddhist traditions interpret them in the same way.
- The traditional Wuda narrative is explained respectfully and distinguished from historical verification.

May the benefit of this work support understanding, compassionate reform and the awakening of all beings.